RISING UP

The planet is changing. Consciousness is finally starting to move towards a remembrance of the Divine. You may think that this is nothing new. Consciousness has always expanded towards itself and beyond in search of itself. So what's different now?

What's different is the massive recognition of it on a conscious level. Previously, the collective consciousness of Humanity only demonstrated this consciousness expansion within a minority. Those who were privileged enough to be included in this secular group fought for the right to expand, grow and move with the energy of this consciousness as it went on an ever expanding outward journey. What was this consciousness looking for? Where was it going? According to the secularists—God, Spirit, Pleiadeans, Mars, Love, Peace, Hope and Home. What they didn't know is that the brilliance of the journey of expansion inevitably leads to the destruction of itself, ending up back at zero.

With each expansion and consequently destruction, we found out more, maybe only to have it shattered by the evil-doers, the non-secular majority that refused to allow the secularists to separate and go home. We kept getting dragged back to the beginning. You first expanded your consciousness enough to be able to create, let's say, a parking space right outside the supermarket, only to find when you came out, "bin-laden" with the products of your abundance work, that the evil-doers had planted a faded, almost non-recognisable wheelchair sign underneath your car, incurring a further charge—abundance tax.

Consistently chasing our tails seemed to be the only way, with nothing more to be done than simply go to yet another counselling or deprogramming workshop where you got the opportunity to beat pillows, representative of the evil-doer of the day.

The desire to expand has been so strong that the opposing forces of destruction have been ignored, pushed aside, in favour of the "lighter" side of things.

The desire to expand has been so strong that the opposing forces of destruction have been ignored, pushed aside, in favour of the “lighter” side of things. Little did we know that in all of the “let it go” mentality of the 80’s and 90’s, we would end up with a deep seated frustration and rage against the ways of the world, no longer being able to be the secularist and simply “pray” for some kind of miracle, hoping to God that it would be answered in time for us to not have to face the real truth.

Now here we are in the year 2004, way past about five ‘end of the worlds’ that I can remember. In each of these periods we were being offered a choice to see our true selves, and own it. Not only haven’t we done it, but we pushed it further away into deeper and darker places, blaming it on something else—terrorists, Saddam, Bush, Mrs. Jones from Moosebreath, your mother, the Devil—you name it. We’ve tried to use it as a scapegoat.

How the hell do we stop this cycle of never ending destruction? There doesn’t seem to be anything we can do about it, right? Wrong! To begin with, you can start honestly looking at what is really happening inside of you. Begin to look at what is being said inside that amazing war machine called your mind. When reading the love and light books, or when in church, or even when taking a serene walk in the forest, ask yourself what is going on in there? If you take notice you will find that there is a never-ending cycle of thoughts on a loop. Round and round, the same thing. You may believe you are thinking about different things, but listen long enough and you will see that you are not. In order for you to expand, your mind is geared to destroy.

How many times have you been thinking about, simply say, buying a new shirt, only to find you end up in a gym, with a three-year membership pass in your hands, knowing that you are only going to go once. The eternal “tomorrow”. The new shirt ends up being delegated to the destruction pile before you even begin. Can’t buy shirt—too fat—need to lose weight—need to go to gym—can’t afford membership—go into debt to buy membership—can’t afford to pay credit card bill as gym membership sent it over the credit limit—need better job to pay for credit card bill—need new shirt to go to job interview. Why do I feel like I’ve been here before? I know—it’s Déjà vu—a cosmic sign—there is no shirt—yeah! That’s it.

Something needs to be done about all that chatter. This is the reason we have tried so many things—meditating, stilling our minds, going to the gym (all with maxed out credit cards and no shirts) ashrams, Sai Baba—you name it. Anything for a bit of respite from the torture of being locked inside there for one more minute.

The funny thing is, we have never used the destructive power in its true form. If you want to get rid of something, fast, the best way is usually to destroy it. Kill it, burn it, nuke it, invade it, occupy it and then eradicate it. Just take the whole war in Iraq we are now watching day-to-day. It’s an externalisation of a process that is not being owned by any one of us, so it needs to come out and be reflected in such a huge way that we cannot miss it.

If you follow one of those annoying cracked record thought patterns until its conclusion, and then see it destroy itself, you will never have to go back to it again. It is a very powerful process and it works. You really have to destroy it though. You can’t just put rose petals on it, because that doesn’t work either. Sooner or later it means that something like ‘Free Iraq’, will become a black ribbon, worn out to the Oscars and other special occasions.

When you have destroyed it, something will happen in this world to reflect to you what you have just destroyed, and what it was that was keeping you “in the dark”. Maybe the reason you lost the parking space to the faded disabled sticker, and were consequently fined, was because you refused to see what is handicapped in your life. Maybe you have been so busy wafting through a purple haze “bin-laden” with incense, mantras and Shakti Gawain that you forgot there were other people in the world. Ordinary normal average everyday Joe Bloggs. You know the ones, those “less conscious” people. The ones who haven’t been included in your secularist group with an expansion placard bumper sticker. Smelly people, control trippers (please don’t touch my crystal—it is attuned to the highest vibrations and it is extremely sensitive).

It’s all about following your destroyer—your full internal power to face the fact that you are a destroyer to begin with (going to zero) so the light we have all been so desperately craving can come in and save the day. Redemption, expansion and our salvation (all of us – not just some of us) must look into our ability to destroy. If we do not, then what we see outside of ourselves in small ways (although if you take a look at poverty, it’s no where near small) will start to escalate even more until there is nothing left.

I don’t mean to frighten you, truly, because I believe so much in humanity’s ability to love and be conscious living Gods. But being God involves integration of some pretty horrible stuff. If you are God, then why poverty? You should be able to answer that if everything we are saying about consciousness is true. You know, unleash your true power, follow your heart, be God, live your dreams, buy a red ribbon.

I think we are heading for a massive shock. The disintegration of “Western” society. The “free” world. It has to come really, as we can’t respect and love what we have now. Therefore God would have to take it away, with unforgiveness, so we can learn the meaning of true love and respect for ourselves and our world.

Please stop asking me what is coming from a clairvoyant point of view. I don’t want to tell you. I would rather you stand strong in knowing that if we act now, in a very basic way, in our own lives (don’t think global just yet or you’ll get lost on a mind loop that goes through 26 dimensions of hell) we can recreate as fully functioning Gods, the future.

The future as it stands right now is bleak. But it is not set in stone. It’s up to us to do something right now. Something to think about. Begin to understand your destroyer and you will see much more than you do at the moment. You may even understand why the Middle East is the way it is, and why they are fighting with sticks, stones and their bodies. Who are we to tell them they are not free and they need to uncover their women from oppression? If Middle-eastern women removing their veils, which to them is an honouring of the feminine, means turning them into plastic Barbie dolls with blonde hair and pale skin, I’d be blowing myself up in a car, too. I’m surprised they haven’t tried to free us before now. Maybe the shock of how evil, dishonouring and disrespectful we are was just too horrific to swallow. Imagine how we must stack up against the magnificence of a culture so rich as that of the Middle Eastern nations, when we pride ourselves by delivering “World Idol” to the planet. To the eastern world they must have been rejoicing over that one, as even their holy book agrees—false idols are not to be worshipped.

Atlantis was a prediction, a global consciousness tool to make sure we didn't get too arrogant for our own good and end up destroying the planet. Sorry to everyone who thinks they were from there (and I have met a few) but I wouldn't be telling anyone about the specialness of being in Atlantis if I were you—it sank. If this is the case, you failed in consciousness, so stop trying to lead us down the same path.

You have the answers inside of you. The destroyer will be honoured, make no mistake. You have probably seen it working in your life already. If you haven't, I send you my love and a big Om namah Shiva*. May your full destroyer power begin to rise up and take part in the great shift that is happening—what we have all been waiting for—complete healing and transformation as human beings.

*One of the most frequently used new-age “light” chants. Literally translated means—I bow to Shiva—funnily enough, the Hindu goddess of destruction.
